Blues Guitar Lessons DVDs: All The Styles In Just One Pack

When you are choosing your repertoire, you can spread your net wide. No need to stick to the Top Forty, go for the Top One Hundred of whatever decade you feel comfortable with. An easy way out that does not need too much research is to just jot down a bunch of Beatles titles.

There are also songs that maybe should not be played. "Wonderful Tonight" by Eric Clapton, "Freebird" by Lynyrd Skynyrd, "Smoke On The Water" by Deep Purple and "Yellow Submarine" by The Beatles are contenders for this list but that probably only applies if your audience is sober.

If you take your tuning one and a half steps or two steps down your guitar is now sounding menacing. If you want to tune your guitar any lower than two steps down, a longer than normal neck will stop the strings from moving around too much. Once you have got an idea of the guitar players you should be listening to and watching, you will be able to go looking for bluegrass guitar tabs.

But be careful, cuz it's easy to pick up bad habits from them. It may be that this pro is a natural like you, but one that didn't take lessons, or spend months and years perfecting his technique. So I recommend you get the Blues Lessons DVD.

In this day and age if you want to learn a guitar technique like funk-skunk you actually do have some different options available to you. This includes learning options that you can access on the Internet and World Wide Web. There are websites that have been set up specifically for novice guitar players.

It's natural to lose your initial enthusiasm, but it would be a shame to stop using such a valuable tool with so much potential for making you a really good guitar player. Backing tracks need to be used in conjunction with your planned guitar practice sessions. If you are learning a solo or some licks from a CD or guitar tabs, play them with your backing as soon as you have the material in your memory.

But be aware, because it's easy to pick up bad habits from them. It may be that this pro is a natural like you, but one that didn't take lessons, or spend months and years perfecting his technique. So I recommend you get a guitar lessons DVD.

It used to be that you practiced alone until other friends or band members found the time to get together to jam. With backing tracks you can jam any time you want. Make use of this tool and enjoy it.
