

Published based on Discover the real facts about dating services

Discover the real facts about dating services

With so many people seeking love, dating services are rapidly gaining popularity. More and more successful, ambitious, glamorous and highly eligible men and women are turning to the web to find romance and compatibility – and with such a wide range of excellent services out there, it is not surprising. Despite the increase in popularity with services such as these, many singles are still afraid to take that step and join a dating website. A large part of this is because of the myths that still linger around dating online.

While we all like to consider ourselves progressive thinking and sussed, there can still be doubts lurking about searching online to find a partner. Perhaps you have had a bad experience in the past, or maybe your friends have made you feel shy or embarrassed about your profile. Whatever the reason, it is time to bust the common online dating myths for once and for all, so that you can find the love and happiness that you deserve.

The most common myths include the following:

The Bigger the Better

Many people think that a large dating website with millions of hits will ensure a better result, with more people viewing their profile. While this may be true in terms of sheer volume, it may not give the best results. Larger sites are often less targeted, and may not have the personalised attention and careful screening process that a smaller, more discreet service may provide. What matters most is the quality of the potential matches you are introduced – this counts far more than sheer volume, and ensures more chance of a fun date and a successful match.

Online Dating is Pricey

Some sites may charge a fortune for their members, but many other sites offer affordable and high quality services that don't require you to break the bank. Dating is an investment, but that doesn't mean that you have to pay huge sums to find that special person. The best dating services don't compromise on quality or value. On your actual dates, you needn't spend too much either – simple yet thoughtful dates can have just as much of an effect.

You Can't Find Love Online

Hundreds of thousands of happy couples can attest to the fact that you can indeed find love online. Instead of random encounters at a packed function or bar, both parties have invested time and effort to meet people to form meaningful relationships. As services such as Match VIP carefully screen and match prospective partners according to mutual beliefs, values, goals, ambition and interests, you have a much higher chance of meeting a like-minded partner – thereby increasing your chance at lasting happiness and love.

Long Distance Romance Doesn't Work

It may not work for every single couple, but if both parties are committed to the relationship, and truly want to be together, then long distance romance can work. The main priority is to be sensible and safe, and make sure that you know your internet dating partner – chat via Skype, send photographs, talk on the phone and connect on Facebook; whatever it takes to get to know your partner before that all-important face to face meeting.

You Can't Trust People on Online Dating Websites

Just like you can't always trust people you meet in real life, you get honest and good people, and not-so-good people. If you follow a few basic safety tips and find dating services that are reliable and secure, then you will not have many problems finding love online.

You can also find this article published on Discover the real facts about dating services