eBay is a great place to find almost any item that you can imagine. Jewelry wholesale auctions are quite common on eBay, and in many cases, you cannot beat the deals that are offered here. However, there are also many con artists that operate through eBay, and you have to use caution.

Start by reviewing all of the details about the jewelry wholesale auctions that you are interested in buying. If you still have questions, send those questions to the seller through eBay's site. Make sure that you keep all of your contact information with the seller through the site so that there is proof.

Check out the person that is offering the jewelry wholesale. Look at their ratings and their positive feedback. Has there been any negative feedback? If so, you may want to reconsider your options and look into other jewelry wholesale auctions. If the feedback is all positive, and the seller's rating is high, doing business with them should not be a problem for you.

Make sure that you are clear about shipment costs and the shipment time frame, as well as the payment options offered. Usually, the buyer is responsible for the shipment costs, and this is added to the total and paid before the item ships. In the case of high ticket items, insurance may be required on the item as well. The seller seldom pays the shipping costs.

If the jewelry wholesale is a high ticket item, such as jewelry that is bought in bulk or rare pieces of expensive jewelry, you should strongly consider using the escrow service that is recommended by eBay. If the seller recommends any escrow service other than the one that eBay recommends, you might not want to do business with this seller - it could be a scam.

Beware of sniper's on eBay! Sniping is against the rules at eBay, but unfortunately people do it anyway. Sniping is basically automatic bidding, which is not against the rules, but the software or service is instructed to place the highest bid in the last possible minute of the auction. This leaves no time for anyone else to place a higher bid.

Instead of sniping, place your first bid at the maximum amount that you are willing to pay for the jewelry wholesale lot. Each time the bid is raised, your bid will automatically be raised until your limit is reached. This is not sniping, and it is a perfectly legal way to bid on auctions at eBay.
