Reasons You Should Choose Sash Window Restoration And Renovation In London

Older houses can be very charming and, if you live in one, you might identify with this quote. "Fewer than half of those people living in houses with old windows have ever experienced them working the way they were intended." This was said by a professional window restorer who specializes in sash window repair and renovation. Because there are such a great number of older homes here, sash window restoration and renovation in London has been very busy.

Many companies selling new 'modern' windows made out of plastic with special treated glass may try to convince you that replacement is the only answer. Maybe you've received one of their fliers in the post extolling the virtues of the great new technology in windows and how they'll make your home more beautiful and efficient. Well, newer isn't always better!

Wood is a very good insulator and windows with wood frames are very efficient, especially if coupled with a storm window. This combination, in fact, may be even more energy efficient than the modern thermo-double-pane units. And the original wooden sash windows that were installed when your house was built just look more appropriate for the dwelling.

Just because an old sash window isn't working properly doesn't mean it needs to be replaced. Sometimes it's as simple as removing some old paint. Or, possibly just a little touch-up here and there, adding some new weather stripping or replacing some worn out ropes.

The truth is, if your windows are old, they've already lasted a good long time. Do you think the newer plastic windows will ever last that long? And the old wooden sash windows, when properly restored, just look so much nicer on an old house than the newer ones.

Now the important part. It takes a specialist to conduct a proper window renovation. An ordinary carpenter is not the person you want tackling this job. You need to be certain that the people handling this assignment have a keen eye to detail and are as good in the areas of decorating and painting as they are in carpentry. Hire a specialist whose bread and butter comes from doing old window restorations. They're out there, and you should find one.

Successful sash window restoration and renovation in London can alleviate all the problems and bring the windows back to what they were originally. Your windows should open, close and lock with minimal effort. They should be the way they were meant to be, and they can.
