It's sometimes hard to imagine what the world looked like a mere twenty years ago. It was a world without ecommerce. A world without any online business. A world where you could not order pizzas online or pay your telephone bill with the click of a button. Today we take it as granted that every business should have a website. Australia is no exception to this rule. Virtually every business, big and small, knows that a web presence is necessary. The ecommerce web design Australia industry has therefore evolved into a flourishing and professional one.

The sheer number of online website in Australia is mind-boggling. And with that has come a plethora of web designers. Some of them small one-man businesses, others large companies employing many specialist designers and web programmers.

It is important to analyze your own needs before even contacting a web designer. Most of them are highly ethical and honest, but if you have no idea of what you want or need you might end up with a website that is not suitable to your needs and for which you paid way too much.

There are a few basic principles that every successful online business should adhere to. In the first place your shopping cart software should be easy to understand and provide for a smooth and logical transaction flow. Your buyer should be able to remove or add new products at any stage during the shopping process. Many well-know online shops lose up to eighty percent of potential customers during the buying process ' a clear indication that the buyer ran into problems he could not solve and left.

Secondly the website should be secure - it should clearly state that and it should show up as a secure site in your browser. Many people are still wary to use their credit cards online and nothing will scare them off more quickly than some or other error message saying that the site is not secure or that the security certificate has expired.

You'll also need a payment processor ' a company that will check whether the client has enough funds in his account, charge his card and then either keep the money in an escrow account on your behalf or transfer it to your bank account.

Your website should adhere to professional standards of design and layout. If it looks like a primary school child designed it, you will without doubt get fewer buyers than if it reflects a high standard of design and a logical layout.

You might not realize it, but even where objects are placed on the website is important. Certain areas on the page will get higher click-through rates than other areas. Certain combinations of colors will get people to feel more comfortable with your website than others. Even some font sizes and text style could have a positive or negative effect on customer experience.

A top quality Australian web design house will explain all this to you and clearly indicate how they have arrived at the quote they gave you. Ecommerce web design Australia has developed into a very professional line of business and you can be assured of world class service and support.
