The reselling of web hosting services became a profitable business. With an investment of one hundred dollars, you may get around one thousand, but this requires lots of work by your side obviously. Each important company has a web hosting reseller plan and many times, it includes a dedicated server for your hosting account.

Reselling web hosting services means to split up the bandwidth and also the disk space to many smaller customers, and main purpose is to get from the clients at least the amount of money you might have put in for your reseller account (on the flip side - why not to get 20-30% more that you just spend on your website hosting reseller plan?). You will be able to provide the high quality internet hosting services to your customers without having being forced to find out everything about server maintenance or work with sophisticated hardware equipment.

Before you decide to rent a dedicated server, make sure you learn how to work with a reseller control panel or else you may lose large amount of precious time. The giant companies that provide web hosting reseller plans include also a software program called Control Panel, which helps someone to administrate anything that could be managed on your server. The best things that you need to learn are:

- creating and deleting accounts - sharing the disc space and bandwidth between your clients.

Reselling web-hosting services is a very competitive business and your success depends on the reliability of your dedicated server.

There's, also, an opportunity to obtain a Virtual Server account but which means that on the real server, there are hosted more virtual servers, and your services quality will depend on your server neighbors. You could get a lot more money from your clients in case you split your resources to hundreds of small accounts. However, it's very difficult to keep under observation each of the users and if you don't pay enough attention to this detail, all your customers might be disappointed and shortly you fill find bad reviews about your services all over the internet.

Ask your company about the feature of hosting multiple domains. Not every your clients will like to host their sites on a sub domain and you may lose the main customers.

Look at prices for client support. It is useless to rent a server with a web hosting reseller plan at thousand miles away with out familiarity with server maintenance if you do not have specialized personnel that will help you, at low prices of course.

And final suggestion: don't host on the similar server both important clients and customers with free or cheap account. Many of the cheap account are opened for e-mail spam, search engine spam, adult or illegal content. In this case, all of your customers will suffer the results.
