Confessions Of A Real Blood Addict

Prior to watching the hit HBO show "True Blood " I had no understanding of the name Alan Ball. Clearly I was indifferent to any of his work. That is what I believed until I investigated Mr. Ball and learned that we've got a long history together thru his writing, directing and my viewing of his various works. Ball wrote "American Beauty " which is an Oscar winning film and he was one of minds behind another hit HBO show, "6 Feet Under. "

My dependence on "True Blood " happened fast and was nearly instantaneous. I was one of those people who had completely ignored the show the 1st season and just happened to catch a marathon and as they say "the rest is history. "

Months before I saw the show my cousin mentioned it to me and explained the story ; she then raved about the show. My speedy thought was "I am not jumping on this whole vampire craze going on now. " I listened but thought "this all sounds so ridiculous and ridiculous no way will I have an interest in this show. " "manmade blood " come on, really?

It's months later on I am home sick, I have watched the four seasons of "House " that I own more times than I care to confess. It was to the point at which I was quoting House's acerbic comments in my sleep. I decided it was time to tune up into something else so I gave "True Blood " a try.

From the moment, the couple come speeding down the line engaging in some pretty naughty behaviour stopping curtly to go in of a convenience store advertising that they sell True Blood, you are hooked. You have no choice but to keep voyeuristically following the young couple. The two obnoxiously go in and talk with the clerk about True Blood and vampires in New Orleans.
