A Reference For The Audio Book Review As Well As Audio Book Review Websites

There are almost as many sites that do an audio book review as there are sites that do regular book reviews. There are a few different kinds of reviews that you should know about. There are also comprehensive sites for reviewing audio books. When you are considering a review make sure you consider the site that it is coming from.

Most types of reviews contain some key elements. Most of them contain a summary of the book and the publishing information of the printed copy. Very rarely will a review contain the publishing information of actual audio book. They may also contain length information, abridged or unabridged, and the reader.

The primary type of review usually is an informative review. It gives a summary of the audio book. Normally it is not an opinion but just a summation. Normally those do not contain the name of the person reading or any information about them.

Another type is strictly the opinion of the reviewer. It normally contains a short summary of the book and sometimes contains information about the reader of the book. Reader in audio books is the term for the person who read the book to audio.

The next type is copied from the book in print and appear on the book itself. These are from other authors, journals, or magazines. These are the ones that are done before the book and audio book come out in stores and are usually promotional materials.

You will also find the reviews that are from a reader. They might be a short blurb or a lengthy discourse. Normally the people who are doing the reviewing have read the book or listened to the audio book and want to offer an opinion on it.

There are a lot of different sites that offer reviews of audio books. Most sites have reviews from noted sources and reviews from individuals who read the audio book. You will have to look at who is paying or not paying for the review when you are considering its validity.

The review sites to pay attention to are the ones that have reviewers that have no stake in what the outcome is. These usually come from people who are just reviewing the book to share their opinion and not because they are being paid to say something good. It is not always an easy thing to find out who is being paid to review and who is not.

Each reviewer is different so you get a variety of tastes and different outlooks on life. Many reviewers offer the chance to share your opinion on the social networking sites. You will want to choose a review that has a variety of different types of review and reviewers.

With audio books you have to consider the person reading the book to audio as well as the content of the book. A good book can be ruined by a bad reader. Remember that the whole book is normally read by the same person and this can be very important when listening
