The Beginnings Of Silk Bridal Bouquets

Silk Bridal Bouquets are ageless. When we attempt to research traditions, we will only discover causes and logic to assist them. Unfortunately, these days most traditions have lost their origins and are generally followed simply to give a slight taste of customs for the entire event. Whether it is east or the west, our sculptures and historical past provide us a lot of evidence to support and explain the presence of most things. One such thing that has wandered into present day to time immemorial may be the custom of silk bridal bouquets.

Today, bridal bouquet is becoming merely a minute tradition which most brides follow so that they could manage to include a part of elegance to their whole wedding. Besides that, some like to include more contrast and elegance for their wedding gown by carrying a bridal bouquet. The whole logic of carrying a bridal bouquet has been lost and ironically when a bride displays a bridal bouquet, I meet none who can tell the real reason for the practice. Consequentially fed up with being amidst blissfully uninformed people, I chose to write an article regarding silk bridal bouquets, to ensure that we all come to recognize the reason as to why a bride has a bridal bouquet in her hand while walking down the aisle.

In its most preliminary stage, the instant this tradition was started, the brides used to carry garlic and herbs together with her. This was done to chase off any evil spirit from her. It was thought that the bride looks most beautiful on her wedding and herbs and spices were placed along with her to defend against all the evil spirits and ghosts. Minor modulations in this are found in numerous customs. For example, in Celtic customs, the bride as well as the groom once wore garlands made from edible flowers. It was done because the fragrant flowers served as powerful aphrodisiacs.

Since this tradition developed with time, a few people started to think that taking something from the bride would provide them good luck. Thus, this began the custom of getting the bouquet from the bride. It was somewhat lethal. So, the people came up with the entire concept of a bridal bouquet. It was decided that the bride can carry a bridal bouquet that will be thrown at the end of the wedding ceremony and whoever gets it, would be considered lucky.

Thus the whole tradition of bridal bouquet which we know these days had been started to save the bride from stealing and plundering. Hope you'll now remember.
