Are these claims a valuable opportunity ? The market abounds with good sales pitches for very mediocre products.

Make an effort cut through the hype by searching forums for comments towards the opportunity.

Doing a Google search for the product & adding the word "scam" to the end will show up most of the poorer performing options.

By looking through forums try to locate a few people who have been working the opportunity for 6 months or more. If they are making money and comfortable with the product then you are probably onto a good thing.

Is this something I may very well do? It's a lot more difficult to launch a business in an location you know almost nothing about as opposed to one which you have had prior working experience. Make sure your current skills have some complement to those of the prospective business.

If you are considering Internet marketing with little or no computer skills it can be done but will be a lot harder if you do not have some sort of technical background.

Is this some thing I really want to do? Whatever you decide upon as your business, you will shell out many hours working at it. There will most likely a fair period of hard work for very little results.

For this reason you really need to enjoy what you are going to be doing. As the enjoyment will give you the staying power to ride out the tough times.

Do I have the income to make it? You should create a business approach, no matter how tiny. This skill will enable you to set some plans. These are necessary on two counts - to keep you centered on going ahead and maturing your business once it is established, and secondly if things just do not work out it will allow you a walk away position, so you don't over-shell out funds which are necessary for other regions of your life
