Cosmetic dentistry functions as a complete oral care where science and art are united to bring about the best possible dental vigor, best looks and best functioning. It is being widely used these days due to the increased desire of people to look good. A perfectly shaped jaw line, a flawless set of teeth and the resultant harmonious features of the face enhance looks by a great deal.

The most common cosmetic dental cure are whitening, enamel framing, contouring, bonding, installing dental bridges, gum lifting, veneer connecting etc. Whitening or bleaching helps lighten discolored teeth. Enamel shaping is a delicate process where very small chips of enamel are removed to improve the shape of the tooth. Dental contouring or reshaping is helpful in solving crooked, overlapping, chipped or cracked teeth.

Bonding is another aesthetic dentistry practice that involves application of a material similar to enamel on the tooth's surface and then shaped, hardened and polished to give it a sparkling appearance. If you are missing a tooth between two teeth you may want to look at getting a bridge done. These are false teeth fixed with the help of two porcelain crowns at both ends. They improve speech and prevent gum diseases but you need to be very careful about dental hygiene to improve the service life of these false teeth.

Having a veneer is a very good option. These extremely thin laminates are attached to the teeth directly to close spaces and cover up discolored teeth. In addition, gum lift, which strives to raise and reshape the gum line, is also used to bring about a symmetrical look to your teeth line. Dental fillings and other refurbishments used to be made in gold, silver etc earlier, but now people prefer amalgamated materials like porcelain because they do not dilute the natural look of the teeth.

Cosmetic dentistry is becoming widespread because it helps people look younger. Traditional dentistry follows oral hygiene and treating teeth diseases, but this non-traditional stream strives to improve the general looks of the teeth, mouth, smile etc.

If you have a cavity you should get it filled because it may turn into a root canal or you may have to have the tooth extracted in time. Due to the breakthroughs in technology these days, cosmetic surgery has broken the glass ceiling and is now accessible and affordable for every one.
