Hosting Packages: How To Choose The Right Type

There is a general misconception that the web hosting industry offers services that are largely homogeneous. They feel that each website host offers almost identical packages. But, this is definitely a false belief. Many types of hosting services are available, and each set of features are meant to be beneficial for different types of client.

* Shared Hosting Plans

Plans that are shared put the website on a server that is also hosting the websites of other clients. Depending upon the host you might share server space with about ten other websites. Or it could be as high as thousands of different sites. Hosting that is shared is a popular method since it is inexpensive when compared to other methods.

Dedicated Servers

A dedicated hosting plan offers customers a lot more flexibility than a shared hosting plan. You will be able to decide which scripts, OS, and software are used. Because your site is the only one on the server, you do not have to worry about other sites taking up your resources.

Package three - VPS Plans

A VPS or virtual private server, gives customers all of the flexibility that is available through a dedicated solution, at a much lower cost. The server is divided in a manner that allows you to use the same resources as other clients. But unlike a virtual server where everyone is fighting for the same space, a VPS gives each customer an equal portion of the resources separate from the others. This helps to give each customer a consistent amount of processing speed and resources on the box.

* Reseller Hosting Packages

Reseller plans are meant for clients who want to distribute a particular company's hosting services using their own company's name. They pay a monthly fee to a provider who allocates space on a server. Then, the reseller can cut that space into small slices to resell to their own customers as if it were their own hosting service. Most people would not be interested in this kind of package unless they intend to resell the space.

When thinking about selecting a website hosting service, you will want to examine the support, reliability, and flexibility of its features. Many people will just go for the cheapest and then somewhere down the line realize they did not account for a number of factors such as growth or needed resources.
