Those of you who own a brick and mortar business should consider putting your store online. The first thing you should learn is to boost your website visits with great internet marketing. We will talk about several different ways to go about this task. The idea is to advertise in venues where a lot of people will not only see your link but go to your site.

Writing quality articles that will help the public will get traffic to your site. Each article has a resource box on the bottom of the page where you place your name and website link. Once people read what you have to say, they will want more and naturally go to your business website looking to see what you are offering. You do not have to be a great writer to do this.

Writing a monthly or weekly newsletter is great for your customers. It should include one giveaway, products on sale and anything interesting going on in your store. Make signing up easy for everyone. Another thing you can do is ask other business for their links and in turn they place yours on their site. This is a great way of advertising.

The hottest thing online today is blogging. This is simply posting a paragraph or two everyday to update your followers. Most people who have an interest in your products are anxious to see what you post. They can give you much needed feedback as well. Communication is really important and customers love it when the owner is available to them.

Social networking sites are interesting to say the least. Their purpose is to allow people to mingle and get to know each other from a business stand point. You will sign up and complete your profile information and make sure to add your link. One thing you do not want to do is sound like an infomercial about your business. It is better to remain low key.

Most people that have a hobby or craft that they love doing are involved in chat groups. There is a group for every topic you could dream up. In order to take advantage of these groups you will need to make a signature line with your link in it. Most groups allow this because it is a link and nothing more. You will receive inquiries about it over time.

When you have the time, take a really good look at the website. If you see a need to change something do it now. You want your site to look fresh and new all the time. Do something little like changing the text colors, or change the header. Also take advantage of the bigger classified ad sites. Write a small creative ad and place it on one or two sites that get great traffic.

In summary you have been given a few examples of internet marketing tips that anyone can follow. If you choose to do just a few you should see the results after a short amount of time. You can get a visitor counter online and place it on your site to keep track of your visitors. Anything you can do to advertise your store, even if it seems outlandish it is worth it when those customers come pouring in making purchases.
