Using Social Sites For Network Marketing Business Success

Social sites could be a great place to air your network marketing business if it were not for those who only use it to socialise and meet new friends. Ah, but that's what the sites were originally for I suppose, so it's a little unfair to condemn the majority who use it correctly. The problem is, it's very confusing for everyone as private friends and family messages get tangled up with the professional messages and there's no clear winner.

For the people who join social sites to use them as they were intended it must be very frustrating looking through the tons of what they would call junk to find true messages to them personally. Facebook have already looked to stop network marketers sending out to many pushy sales pitches to their facebook friends, this may be the signal to look for pastures new.

Let me put a scenario to you.

We were checking our emails and something caught our eye, it was someone explaining about a new social site that was perfect for everyone. It was only 8 months old and attracting over 1000 members a day and increasing even though it was still Beta testing different elements of the program. But the most important part of this site was its four different programs kept separate even though under one roof: - 1) Keeping in contact and socialising with true Friends and meeting new. 2) Keeping in contact with Family. 3) Putting yourself or business in front of other Professionals. 4) Using a Dating facility. What a revelation this would be, just to be able to sort out what you want to receive on which site so that nothing becomes messy.

What if it had an affiliate membership attached as well as free for those who are into network marketing and want to promote it, say $10 per month. Commissions could be $2 front line, $0.50 down a further 6 levels giving a monthly residual income of $1,644.00 for everyone sponsoring 3 front line or $28,002.00 for 6 front line. Who wouldn't want to join a site like that?

When Facebook started there was no clue of the huge growth it has attained, so what if they had had an affiliate program incorporated and YOU were one of the first 200thousand members. Your monthly residual income would be enormous to say the least.

This scenario is now fact!
