Keyword (KW) research is a crucial first step in determining whether you will earn money online or waste your valuable difficult work on an unprofitable niche. The following is a guide on actions to choosing a profitable niche KW.

The first step is the brainstorming process. Kind down as many KW terms that you either have interest in or know a lot about it. Basically, the more you're interested in something, the easier it will probably be to write about. Do not worry about whether the KW has a high price per click or has a lot of searches.

Your focus throughout the brainstorming task is to gather as numerous KW as feasible that could be a possible niche topic to write about. Should you don't know anything or don't have any interests on any subjects then go to article directories for example Ezine to get ideas. Individuals usually write articles on Ezine to promote their websites. This way you are able to grab other peoples search terms and start to think of niche topics to create about.

As soon as you've gathered your words, determine which words are targeted towards a "buying" crowd. The purpose of this exercise is to eliminate all the KW terms that don't have any buyer potential. For example, free of charge language software program isn't a good niche as the individuals that are searching for this term aren't in a purchasing mood.

These type of individuals are looking for free of charge software and will not click on your ads to get additional product information about language software program. However, this is not always the case, but usually if the searcher is in a buying mood, they will probably be much more willing to click on ads for more info.

Once you've crossed out all of the non-buying terms, you are able to perform a long-tail keyword search by utilizing Google AdWords Tool.

The objective of this is to determine if you will find a lot of long-tail searches to support your primary topic. This is just the very first action in keyword research. There are few more steps on how to earn money via keyword study.
