

Published based on Looking At MonAvie Scams Versus Opportunities

Looking At MonAvie Scams Versus Opportunities

About six years ago, Monarch Health Sciences introduced a new healthy juice drink called MonAvie and it is sold and distributed through multi-level marketing. MonAvie juice has been showing up on the evening television newscast as the new wonder juice that treats everything from your aching feet to high cholesterol. Are the juice and the sales opportunities all they're stacked up to be or is it all MonAvie scams?

The main ingredient in the MonAvie juices is the acai (ah-sah-ee) berry. Acai berries come from the Brazilian rain forest and are reported to be exceedingly high in antioxidants. Antioxidants are those wonderful little molecules in the body that keep oxidation from taking place and damaging our cells, causing things such as aging and disease.

You can find antioxidants in a lot of foods, the most well known is Vitamin C. With a blend of 19 separate fruit juices and glucosamine, MonAvie comes in a 28-ounce wine bottle and costs about the same as a medium priced wine. To get the most benefits from the juice, MonAvie suggests you drink four ounces each day - two in the morning and two in the evening. When that figures out to a couple nights in a hotel each month, that's a pretty expensive health supplement.

When conducting its own tests on MonAvie, a men's national magazine placed it up against several other widely available fruit juices. They found that brand name orange, grape, and pomegranate juice rated higher in Vitamin C and other antioxidants. When considering the cost of MonAvie, you'd be better off eating a bowl of mixed berries and drinking orange juice with your meals.

To make money with this system, you must recruit others to sell the product and then they need to recruit others. This usually starts out by harassing your friends and family to help you get started. Before you do that, you might ask yourself if they can afford it. You will not make money unless the people you recruit continue to sell, or buy the product. The multi-level marketing system works well for the top sellers, but not always so well for the average person, which is where most of us fall.

In order to make money with this kind of system, you not only have to sell the product, you have to sell the selling of the product. In other words, you have to pitch the juice, while at the same time, convincing the person that they want to sell it too. Recruiting people and getting them to sell and recruit more people is the only way you can make it in this kind of business. It simply isn't something everyone can do.

Before investing your money, you must ask yourself if you are the kind of person who is willing to work harder than you ever have and be comfortable selling this product to everyone you know or happen to meet. That means friends and family. In reality, not many people fit this description. If you really want to get something to feel healthier, get some fresh produce at the market and eat some every day.

Sour grapes or not depends on your perspective. If you're one of the lucky few who can make money in multi-level marketing you can be extremely happy selling MonAvie. If you're just the average person like most of us then there are MonAvie scams everywhere. You could say that majority rules.

monavie scams

Looking to find the definitive source of information on monavie scams?

categories: affiliate programs, internet business, web business, home based business

You can also find this article published on Looking At MonAvie Scams Versus Opportunities, and on the tag pages Affiliate Programs, home based business, internet business, web business.