It is a fact when someone says that YouTube has won the hearts of millions of people. With millions of video views every day, we can conclude that is one of the reasons why many people go online these days.

Most videos that can be watched here are not even made by professionals or directors. They are just videos that were simply caught by mobile phone cameras/cameras in different places and events.

With the popularity and comfort of using YouTube, people even came up with a term to describe the favorite videos of many. It is called "viral videos". Needless to say, they used the word "viral" because these videos spread like a virus.

YouTube can also make someone an instant celebrity. A man who showed his dancing prowess through his video entitled Evolution of Dance garnered a whopping 140 million views. Here, he performed various kinds of dancing from different generations. Not only he gained popularity but he can now also perform in gatherings if asked to.

He would probably just have his family, relatives and friends as his audience and his great talent will remain hidden and wasted if his video was not uploaded in this site.

There are many TV programs nowadays that show people's talents from different countries. The problem is that they don't show it all. In this man's case, he could have sent his videos to these TV shows but for sure, his clip will be cut and only portions of it will be seen by the viewers.

If you prefer action or something wild, then you might want to check out the Battle at Kruger. It is about a pitiful baby buffalo who was running towards an alligator with mouth wide opened because he was being run after by wild lions. Good thing the baby buffalo's herd came to protect him and chased the lions afterwards.

This kind of video could not easily be seen in ordinary TV channels. Scenes like this could only be seen in the wild which is place we cannot all dare to visit. With 50 million views, it just proves that people would love to see things like this but just lack the ways to.

But wait; let's not give all the credit to YouTube or other video sharing sites. We need to remember that without the internet, none of this could happen and such phenomenon will not occur.
