Learning a second language to any sort of passable standard is hard, just ask someone who has already learnt. It becomes harder to learn a second language the older you get. Children that have bilingual parents find it easier to master more languages. Adults trying to learn a new language need a vast array of different learning aids to ensure maximum retention; where as children who learn a language in school soak up and retain the information quickly and easily. Spanish is one of the widest learned languages in the modern world and now there are many more ways for adult learners to try and achieve, if not fluency, at least the basics. Luckily with the technologies available today there a wide range of different tools that consumers may use to learn the language of their choice.

There are still plenty of printed tools that you can use to help you learn the basics of Spanish. These are mainly comprised of dictionaries which allow you to translate English words into Spanish and translate Spanish words into English. Most of these dictionaries are pocket-sized and easily carried into Spanish speaking countries to help augment your language abilities when you need it most. With the help of word quiz and picture cards, many of the words books available will be able to help you master the basics of Spanish in no time.

There are modern equivalents of these tools, namely the DVD and CD. Lots of people learning Spanish prefer to use a CD as they are convenient, you can listen whilst in your car, walking your dog or going shopping; all you need to do is pop the CD in your CD player and you are away and learning. Many people prefer to learn Spanish from CDs as it allows them the chance to learn how the world is pronounced properly.

DVDs can offer you a classroom like instruction for the safety and comfort of your own home. The lessons are taught as though you are in a classroom setting with an instructor passing on the knowledge with the use of several different tools originally designed for use within a classroom. One of the main upsides to using DVDs to learn is your ability to re-watch them and absorb more information each time until you have mastered the basics in your own time.

Perhaps the best tool to help you learn Spanish are the electronic translators that can help you to translate what you want to say on the spot. Lots of these translators feature an audio dictionary which can be extremely useful. You can type a word in English and have it repeated back to you in Spanish which means that you will be able to learn more words as well as their pronunciation. This can be a life saving feature when you are stuck. Learners who are not confident in their abilities will find these devices an invaluable tool to bolster the vocabulary in Spanish speaking countries.
