Kelly Brook Is The Face Of Reebok Easytone

Kelly Brook teamed up with Reebok once again in another campaign for the sportswear giant. But at the disappointment of many, she will be keeping her clothes on, unlike the last time she modelled nude for their line of trainers in a nationwide naked billboard campaign.

The brunette bombshell is the face of the new line of trainers said to improve toning in the legs and bum via a unique sole that creates instability. She will also be their spokeswoman for their new Jukari Fit to Flex workout.

Reebok created the workout with inspiration from the performances of Cirque du Soleil, it targets core muscles and the upper body by using a light elastic band that can be used in a variety of ways.

Brook, now 30, says she is happy with her body and has accepted who she is, but still maintains a fitness regime. She says "I've hit 30 and I have accepted this is my body shape, and I'm happy with what I am and who I am. My legs are quite toned at the moment and I have a small waist so I dress to accentuate it. I have a bigger bum and bigger boobs but I'm generally small-boned. I've got real boobs and I guess they could be a bit perkier! But in general I'm pretty happy with everything."

The model says she enjoys swimming, walking yoga and dancing. An avid member of dance and fitness classes, she was the perfect candidate for this exercise range aimed primarily at women.

She has recently become somewhat of a movie star and is currently starring in the film Piranha 3D. Although she only studied at drama school for three years when she was younger, she said this started her love of dancing, which she still does to keep in shape.

Kelly says, "I have always been energetic and active and I've always loved dancing. I've been surrounded by people into fitness and health for a long time, so have always been conscious about what I put in my body. I'm also aware of keeping myself in shape for my job and general lifestyle.

Kelly previously starred in a rather controversial nude billboard ads in which she posed in a pair of Easytone trainers, she is now the face of the Reebok Easytone campaign.
