The blog sites are going crazy with the must-have gadget of the year. Other tech companies are scrambling to catch up, but the Apple iPad is already setting the new standard in techno-cool.

As the leader in revolutionary technology, Apple continues to distance itself from its competitors with this new product. It features a large 9.2-inch viewing screen perfect for clear views from almost every angle. And despite its larger size it is very light and thin. And the long life battery gives you up to ten hours between recharges, letting you play with your new toy uninterrupted for a long time.

The touch responsive software found in the iPod Touch and iPhone re-emerges in the iPad, only it's been re-engineered to be much more precise. Now typing and selecting different functions is easier.

But the spec's aren't what you're really interested in, are they? No, what makes the iPad so amazing is all the functions. Use it like a tablet computer to check your e-mail, or surf the web using the built-in wi-fi or a 3G data network from a mobile carrier.

If you're familiar with Apple products then you know about the app store. This is the online store you visit to download all the hottest games, unique applications, or the new movies you want to see on your machine. You can do all sorts of things, like paint with your fingers or practice your instrument on a virtual piano keyboard. Whatever you can think of there is probably an application that does it.

Love to read books? The free iBook application will have you hooked. With text so clear it looks like you're reading it from a hardback, just drag your finger across the screen to turn the page.

Accessibility is often an issue that new devices overlook. But the people at Apple have made their device able to accommodate the varying degrees of disability in the population. The universal access feature is built in so whether you are hard of hearing or physically impaired you can use the iPad straight from the box, no additional software needed.

The on-screen keyboard can be used to work the machine just like a laptop, and it hides away when you don't need it. But if you prefer the feel of a real one, a wireless or docking keyboard can be purchased. Other available accessories include a camera kit so you can download photos directly to your machine, ear buds for listening to music, and a protective case to keep your device safe.

But seriously, the Apple iPad isn't all about fun. They've managed to make the device business-focused, too. Use it to create graphic-rich presentations or type up documents, leaving you to wonder if there's anything this great machine can't do.
