The online market in the UK is still thriving even though the recession has hit some business areas very hard. In this country in 2009 we spent 38 billion shopping on the internet which makes up for almost a third of the total European industry. But what benefits are there to buying clothes online and is it actually safe now to purchase products without leaving the house?

It's very easy to tell what is available when purchasing garments on the internet and there will also be larger selection of items to choose from. With the sheer range of designers on the web it will be easier to track down exactly the sort of item you are trying to find. Products can be bought at any time of day or night, even on bank holidays, and there are no queues to deal with or other customers in busy shops. You will also save a great deal of time from the comfort of your own home, rather than walking around shopping centres or waiting in traffic.

Online shoppers find themselves offered deals like discounts, vouchers or cash back schemes as incentives to buy online. As there is more competition for trade on the internet than on the high street more bargains there will be more bargains available to fight for your trade. You even have experts in some stores who will give you tips on which items go best together while you are able to stay at home.

With the rising cost of petrol and lack of money still in the economy you will be saving a great deal by staying at home and not using your car. This will also cut down on any greenhouse gas emissions you will make if you take fewer car journeys.

There is a minimal risk now when entering card details over the internet so paying your bills this way is very secure. If a product isn't to your liking some companies are even ignoring the fee to return an item.
