Ways To Promote Your Band Online Without Spending Much

If you are interested in getting promotion for your band without the knowledge of a band promoter and spend thousands on it, then this is the article for you. You will find 3 steps you can follow in order to promote your music on YouTube without getting taken for all of your money.

You will need to build a landing page for your band. This may sound harder than it really is; all you have to do is set up a free account on a site such as Blogger to create a page for the band.

If you get an auto-touch account for around 10 dollars a month, your followers will get an automatic communication from you with you doing anything. You would have money well spent on a service like this.

You should have a short video promo and right below you auto-touch HTML code. This way visitors to your site can click on it or enter their email information to receive more videos such as the one they see. This is how they will get auto-responders how every often you have it set.

Post a video of your band performing to YouTube. On the front page of your video place the domain name of your blog where the auto-touch is set up.

When the video is over tell your viewers in order to hear more of your music and follow your band, they should visit your web page, so be sure to give the domain name. This way you will have a list of followers or fans to your page.

Have the auto-touch set to have emails sent once a week. Send music promotions, info on how they can obtain merchandise and you can even offer free stuff to your fans. Your fans will enjoy it as well as appreciate it.

It just takes a little imagination to work your band and it's music on your own, but it will pay off. One day you will be able to pay a promoter and a manager to handle these kinds of things for you.
