Constantly include product critiques on the website so visitors will have an initial understanding on what the product can do to those who buy them. Also include testimonials from users who have already tried the product. Make sure that these customers are willing to allow you to use their names and photos on the site of the specific product you are marketing.

You may also write articles highlighting the uses of the product and include them on the website as an additional page. Make the webpages attractive compelling and include calls to act about the information. Each headline should attract your readers to try and read more, even contact you. Emphasize your special points. This helps your readers to learn what the page is about and will want to find out more.

2. Offer free reports for your viewers. If possible position them towards the top side of your page so they simply can't be missed. Try to create autoresponder messages that will be mailed to people who input their private information into your sign up box. Based on research, a sale is finished usually on the 7th contact with a prospect.

Only two things can possibly happen with the web page alone: closed sale or the prospect leaving the page and never return again. By placing useful information within their in-boxes at certain specified period, you will remind them of the product or service they thought they want later and can find out how the sale is finished. Be sure that the content is targeted at specific reasons to purchase the product. Don't make it sound like a sales pitch.

Focus on important points like how your product can make life and things easier and more enjoyable. Include compelling subject lines in the email. As much as possible, avoid using the word "free" because there are still older spam filters that dumps those kind of contents into the junk before even anyone reading them first. Convince those who signed up for your free reports that they will be missing something big if they do not avail of your products and services.

3. Get the kind of traffic that is targeted to your product. Just think, if the person who visited your website has no interest whatsoever in what you are offering, they will be among those who move on and never come back. Write articles for publication in e-zines and e-reports. This way you can locate publications that is focusing on your target customers and what you have put up might just grab their interest.

Try to write at the least two articles per week, with a minimum of 300-600 words in total. By continuously writing and maintaining these articles you will generate as many as a hundred targeted readers to your site in a day. Remember that only one out of 100 people are likely to buy your product or get your services.
