Top 10 Unusual Gifts For This Christmas

To make sure Christmas 2010 is like no other, invest in some of these unusual and existing gifts, which are sure to be remembered by the whole family for the rest of the year.

Retro sweet hampers, containing everything from Sherbet Dibdabs to flying saucers are a treat which can be shared by the whole family. For the more adventurous, why not create your own bush tucker trial with a box of Chocolate covered giant ants. The Columbians who harvest them claim they are delicious and nutritious, but that's for you to decide.

If they love animals, but don't want to eat them, adopt a wild animal for them. Gift packs vary but everyone's favourite this Christmas is set to be the Meercat. You can adopt a Meercat for 12 months and help conserve the species and their natural habitat. Your loved one will also receive goodies such as a cuddly Meercat toy, a certificate and twice yearly updates. If the real thing appeals to you more but you don't want the mess, buy an inflatable dinosaur, which is sure to scare your guests on Christmas day.

For the budding scientist in your family, the Natural History Museum presents "Rhino poo in a box". A Rhino's dung is odourless and nutrient rich, providing the perfect environment for seedlings to grow into a miniature Banana tree.

If you want to bring light to somebody's life this Christmas, give them Sunshine in a Jar, the incredible solar lamp that requires no actions to turn it on or off. Its multiple functions mean it could act as a cosy nightlight for a child or a portable lamp for the garden. Alternatively Name a Star after your loved one and give them their own bit of space. The gift pack will provide them with coordinates giving them the exact location of the star.

Attention seekers will be made up with personalised gifts, such as Newspaper spoofs and calendars. The calendars can feature a particular name in various locations such as clouds in the sky, on a sandy beach, or in a snowy landscape. Newspaper gifts will feature the name in headlines, with stories varying from lottery wins and competition winners.

The last but not least, blow your budget gift, has to be a Zorbing gift experience. As well as providing them with a thrilling experience, you will also have the opportunity to send them rolling down a hill inside a huge PVC ball, while you begin to think about next Christmas...
