International Delivery Of Flowers With FTD Same Day Florists

Sending flowers is one of the sweetest ways to express your feelings. They apologize for hurt feelings, comfort those in sorrow, brighten the day of someone who is ill and bring joy to heart of lovers everywhere.

The international flower delivery industry has been growing by leaps and bounds in recent decades, thanks to nearly instant communication advances. Thanks to this growth, FTD and 1800flowers.com have edged out nearly all competitors.

FTD (Florists' Telegraph Delivery) is the brainchild of fifteen American florists, founded in 1910 with the intention of connecting retail florists all across the country. In this way, people could send flowers to loved ones no matter where they lived. As the business grew and expanded its reach, its name changed to Florists Transworld Delivery to reflect its global reach.

Conversely, 1800flowers.com was the vision of a single man, Jim McCann, who owned a small florist shop in New York. In 1986 he followed the basic concept of FTD and established his own network of florist shops, becoming FTD's major competitor when he took his business online just six years later.

Both of these international flower delivery sites render flower-and-specialty-gift-shipping service at their best that would meet every flower-sender's goal, with a heap of professionalism and customer satisfaction.

The advantage of using 1800flowers or FTD is a problem free shopping experience, particularly if you use their websites to order your arrangements and packaging. You can browse through their gifts and floral arrangements, ordering online or if you prefer you can call their main number and place an order by telephone.

FTD and 1800flowers.com both work to insure that they carry only the freshest, most beautiful blooms. And since they both consist of thousands of florists across the nation and the world, your flowers or gifts will be delivered as quickly as possible, usually by the next day. You can, of course, arrange for same day delivery if you order early enough in the day!

Only the best florists work for both companies to make sure flowers are aesthetically arranged. It will ensure that you will not be embarrassed once your gift reached your recipient.

Across generations, ways of sending love to one's family and friends have significantly changed - something which one would, of course, credit to the rapidly developing technology and system of communication.

FTD still, after a century in business, adheres to the same business model it started with-the most beautiful, professionally arranged flowers delivered quickly and priced competitively. 1800flower.com, although a relative newcomer in the international flower delivery industry, is also adamant that their blooms, merchandise and delivery service meet the highest possible standards.

There are many international flower deliver sites now in the 21st century. They have changed the way people interact and deal with both conflict and happiness, all for the better.

These international flower delivery services have allowed us all to touch each others' hearts, no matter where in the world that we live.
