You Should Ditch Your Low Paid Job And Start Earning Good Money As A Window Cleaner Now

If you want to ditch your low paid job and start earning good money as a window cleaner, you have to decide that this is what you want to do. This is going to be the hardest step of the entire process because nothing is definite.

The initial step is for you to believe that you can make your dreams possible. Arrange to where you have money saved or some kind of financing for start-up funds. You will also need to make sure that you can pay your bills for a while your business takes off. It is ideal to be able to take care of personal expenses for at least one year, but try to ensure you have enough cash to pay them for as long as possible.

You also need to have a backup plan. Create a new resume for yourself and keep it in a safe place in case it is needed later. The goal is to never need that resume again.

And before you quit your job for this opportunity to earn more money, have a business plan in place. You need to know where to start once you quit your current occupation, so you can research your market, see what kind of money you may have to spend, and see what you can offer that your competition is not offering.

You'll also need to buy the equipment and cleaning supplies that you will need with your start-up money. Research prices so that you know you are receiving the best deal, but don't sacrifice quality. IN the meantime, you have to be sure to not spend all of your cash so that you can have the money to market your business.

Also you need to have good public relations. You need to contact businesses directly to let them know that you are available to start cleaning their windows for a specific introductory price. Make sure you offer them a promotion of some kind so that they will try you out. If they like you, they will keep you.

You may also want to offer contracts. For instance, a business or individual can try you out and then contract with you for a year. They pay in advance for you to visit on a schedule to clean their windows. Work out packages that they can choose one that fits within their budget.

To acquire the funds for your business and so that you have the ability to ditch your low paid job and start earning good money as a window cleaner, you can save your money over time or you can acquire a business loan for small businesses. With a good plan, a budget, and marketing ideas that will be attractive to customers, you can achieve success in no time.
