Transfer Email Is The Best Solution to Moving All Your Emails

Each time you consider making any changes in your computer setup, keep in mind that you need to learn new systems and programs. You will have to understand which of the programs replaces this and that, or which of your files can be converted simply or at least opened in your new system. And having said that, you need to spare some time learning all the new programs and navigating them as well.

And with the recent release of the new Mac tablet, more and more people will be looking for solutions to changing systems, or indeed to synchronizing the two systems. Everyone knows that neither Apple nor Microsoft like making compatible systems so it's not always easy.

When it comes to transferring your email you'll come across the same problems. You'll need to move your email from either Windows Live Mail, Outlook Express or Outlook to Thunderbird, Apple Mail (or Mac Mail) or Entourage - though we don't recommend Entourage. Thunderbird is compatible on Windows and Mac even though the interface slightly looks different.

At Transfer-email.com you can buy downloadable guides that show you how to transfer your email from any email program to any other email program, including PC to Mac or Mac to PC.

This site was set up when the author of the Easy-Email guides to synchronizing email realised that a version of his solution would solve most people's problems with transferring email. He sat down and researched and wrote guides for 3 months straight!

Some solutions on the internet work for certain email clients and not others and, seeing how many issues arise from this, he decided to write specific guides to and from specific email clients.

The trick to this transfer email solution is pretty simple really. Because Gmail uses IMAP it can synchronize with any email client. Essentially you need to first transfer the old emails to Gmail and from there transfer them to your new email client.
