Silver.Ag Manual: How To Clean Your Silver Necklace

Anyone who has any type of silver jewellery will know that this type of metal can become tarnished and can begin to wear out over time. If you have a silver necklace that you would like to keep in tiptop condition, then there are lots of different things that you can do in order to keep it clean.

One very simple method that you can use in order to clean any type of silver is to get a toothbrush and some white toothpaste and then to scrub the necklace thoroughly. After doing this then you simply need to wash off the toothpaste and then run the silver down using a cloth. If you were to use this on a very regular basis then your silver jewellery should remain very clean.

Instead of using toothpaste it is also possible to create your own paste by mixing together baking soda and water. Again, use the same method as above and you should see some decent results. Alternatively, you could want some hot water, add some baking soda, and then soak the necklace there instead.

Another possible solution when trying to clean your necklace will be to put a sheet of aluminium foil, the necklace itself, and a few inches of water into a dish or pan. To this add two tablespoons of baking soda and then boil for about five minutes. Remove and rinse off the necklace, and then buff it until it looks shiny.

Of course, as an alternative to all of these you can also go and purchase a silver polish. Simply use a brush in order to apply the polish, and then follow the instructions that are set out with the product.

These are just a few different things that you could try, and any of them should have some decent results.
