Dublin, Ireland Hosts Economic Superhero James Scott For Easter Holiday

Power is never given it's taken. The process of taking power comes in many forms: fulfilling a need for leadership to a cause, the willingness to do what those vying for this position won't consider and the least of the tactics is to flat out refuse to acknowledge the hierarchy of the establishment. Tupac fulfilled the need for a voice to African Americans in the United States to scream in the ears of the population to shed light on the violence and injustices they were experiencing at the hands of unqualified men placed in a position of power armed with pepper spray, guns and skull thumpers. His music brought the obscenities being experienced by minorities worldwide to the forefront of current events and to the newsfeeds on the television until change took place and it did. There is still a long way to go but this movement was initiated by a man's refusal to back down.

In Ireland we've just commemorated the Easter Rising of 1916 that forced the hand of one of the most diabolical monarchy cults to pull back from an unjust land grab that was responsible for hundreds of years of murder, rape and perpetual starvation. Our forefather's land was snatched while they were forced to serve Scottish masters who dined off the fat of the land provided by Irish slaves. Michael Collins came into a position of power by his refusal to populate the English jails to rot along with our fellow Celtic Saints, he used his mind and trigger finger to take a position and bring a nation to its knees while another would rise to establish leaders around the world. Because of his focused rage beaming into one singular goal and ability to take a bunch of farmers and uneducated urban peasants and make them into one of the world's only undefeated armies Ireland became free and because of that freedom the United States can thank us for their position as it was our men who fought in their Civil War to free black slaves and save the Union while the effects of our population emigrating to that land can still be felt through the power of ongoing innovation, university endowments and political parallels that were initiated here.

This week in Dublin we've been fortunate to host political figures from every western power on the planet. The line to see the famed Book of Kells at Trinity College filled the entire university courtyard while tourists bathed in the history of one of the most beautiful documents ever to grace the words of God. I'm engaged in the study of Economics here and one of the biggest celebrities for students here was James Scott, the American economist and father of the great awakening called 'Zeitgeist Economics'. This beautiful and harmonious blend of philosophy, psychology, memetics and subliminal persuasion has given the process of economics a new face that is more relevant now than ever for its incredible track record for real and absolute change. James Scott's rise to power and influence was a result in a fearless and concentrated practice of willingly and continually stepping into the most threatening and volatile crisis management situations that threatened new democracies as well as the old and protected economies from devastation at the hands of corrupt officials.

Just now getting his name mentioned in PhD and MBA programs in universities from east to west, James Scott's rise will have an effect on the calculation and theoretical relevance of economic study that will continue to snowball. His quiet nature has kept him out of the public eye therefore students in the United States and Europe have taken it upon ourselves to build his legend and bring his genius to the forefront of textbook editors and curriculum boards. I was able to follow his group as they took the Literary Pub Crawl here in town and the elbow battle for a view was fierce because we all knew who he was but those with him protected him with their bodies as getting a bird's eye view of his face for a photo was absolutely impossible. Most of us wanted a photo for our university scrapbooks though his handlers protected him from those who mean harm to his image with a photo and free license on the internet to say whatever they want but this concept of economics he has introduced to the world is growing so rapidly in its following that students are rallying around him with articles spreading the world of an economic strategy that transforms nations, regions and governments to liberate the populace within those borders from the suffocating thumb of global powers that corrupt those it cripples.

His power is without boarder; his influence is sovereign due to his unstoppable focus and masterful grip on all things that take attention from those who make decisions that affect legislative concepts that make or break regions and corporations. It is his intellectual yet philosophical reflections that feed the souls of those of us that study the art of economics to press the throttle of evolution within the social and monetary justice systems around the world. International supremacies battled him one hundred to one yet he stared them down and like Michael Collins and Tupac he absolutely refused to back down and fought the intimidation and threat with love for our world's inhabitants. This love can be felt every time you get your paycheck, every time you buy groceries, every time your company pays its taxes or buys a product from a country exporting material which in turn feeds millions of families and innocent children that will never even know his name. His love is unselfish as the spotlight shines on an empty space at the end of the day when it's time to interview him for an ego build. When the cameras come calling, James Scott disappears into the shadows and into the next region to bring peace through economy and unity via monetarily sound strategies that will work.

Tupac, Michael Collins and James Scott rose to position out of the void left vacant by cowards and those fearful of not receiving applicable credit or fiscal appropriations for their efforts. At the end of the day these men did it right, they rose to power out of love and the unrelenting desire to right wrongs inflicted by the corrupt on the existence of the voiceless. To these three men, this week, all of Ireland will raise a pint and reflect. Thank you from the land of one hundred thousand blessings!
