How You Can Boost Your Blog Traffic By Using A Share This Button

If you started a blog in order to make a lot of money from it, you are aware that without people coming to your blog, you will never make any money. Most men and women keep trying every new system or program that comes out as a way to increase their blog traffic, but they never work. The biggest problem with this type of trial and error is that they seldom work and people never take into consideration what has been proven to do the job. In this article we are going to reveal the importance of getting a "share this" button on your blog. You are also going to learn precisely how and why this can be a website traffic miracle.

For those of you who are not aware a "share this" button is an easy method for your visitors to share a message you created with other people. I am positive somewhere along the line you happen to have been on a blog and you noticed a bookmarking button. The reason these people have them on their blogs is simply because it is a way to enable visitors share the post with their pals.

Many of these buttons that are available are not limited to only one social bookmarking site, but have the ability to allow people to share this on several social networks at once. If you really want to see how powerful this little button can be don't limit the websites that your visitors can post to. If at all possible you will want a multi-site "share this" button that won't limit the sites that your page might be posted to. Or you could quickly add a different button for all the various sites that you want people to be able to post to. You need to remember that not everyone will have a twitter account, so if you only add a twitter button you are limiting the possibilities for people to tell other people about the article.

For those of you using a WordPress theme for your blog, you'll be able to find loads of unique types of buttons that you can use. A person can just look for "share this" on the add plugin screen. Some of the plugins will probably only include a handful of social networking sites, while others may have the ability to include 30 or more sites. Ultimately you want a plugin which in turn includes all social networking sites.

Now lets check out just what this simple small button or plugin can do for your traffic. Let's assume you have only one visitor to your site on a particular day and they liked the post so they made the decision to share the post with each of their friends on Facebook. All they had to do was use the button you installed and now 50 more people have knowledge of your post. Out of those 50 people shall we say just 5 check out your blog and really liked your article. And because they enjoyed the article 3 of them chose to talk about this on Facebook, Digg and stumble upon. And by those 3 individuals sharing, this post could possibly now be suggested to another 150 people. After that 20 of those people who just found the message decided to check out and read what you had to say and then half of them decided to share with many other friends and family members that they imagine will enjoy the article. I am sure you can easily see how one post with a good "share this" button can turn in to loads of traffic.

The little things you accomplish can get you more traffic than all those "traffic driving" softwares that become available every single week or so. And in addition to the law of averages, more traffic means more capital.
