Great Drop Shipping Costs For Selling Online: Where To Find Them

It's most important to you for drop shippers you use to be very competitive in their pricing, since the costs they incur in storing and then delivering an item on your behalf are appreciable. These costs can be anything from $2 to $5 for each item and the drop shipper must recover that cost from the retailer.

Great customer service should be a "given" when you are in the market for a drop shipper. Let's face it, you've received payment from your customer for their purchase of the goods, you've made your order, now the success of your online selling business effectively depends on just how prompt the drop shipper is at delivery of the goods to your customer!

For effective drop shipping, you need a company that responds promptly and that allows you to track the progress of your item delivery. You need them to send you the tracking number through email. The best way to test their system is to order an item yourself and then follow its progress until you have it delivered to your own address.

Absolutely make sure that any drop shipper you are considering has an unblemished track record to date. You will be wanting a company that has been in the business for at least two years, since that's about the least length of time required for a new company to set itself up and get itself running to a smooth, effective routine.

Just because a newer company may be cheaper doesn't necessarily mean it is reliable or has any kind of reputation. Also, check some of the company details like, for example, an email address ending with the company name. If it is there, then that's a good indicator of company stability.

Completely avoid companies that use free email accounts. After all, a drop shipper, looking to establish itself as a reputable business and having spent thousands of dollars in setting up that business, is unlikely not to create appropriate paid business email systems for the company.

If you can find the right supplier, you may well receive some extra bonuses you can use for your own online business. These bonuses might include, for example, discount coupons or leaflets providing additional consumer information. Maybe a notice saying "thank you" might even be included!

These additional "bonuses" given by the supplier can be a real plus for you, as your own customer will see you as really taking an interest in them. Your relationship with your supplier will also be enhanced since their going the extra mile for you will certainly help build your confidence and faith in them and their capabilities.
