Compared to different social networking websites, such as Facebook and Twitter, LinkedIn allows the integration of work with your personal life on the Internet. This creates various opportunities in making money at the same time you make friends. That being said, you should really get more connections on LinkedIn.

When it comes to social media, you can never have too many connections. In fact, that is the mantra that you should keep repeating to yourself over and over and over. Get more connections. Among all of the widely popular social media platform on the Internet is LinkedIn.

The problem is that many people try to be successful at this, but not very many get that. The rest fumble with a supposedly working strategy, and then move on to another upon failure. It is really hard to get that many followers, minions or friends, however you call them. The primary reason is that people cannot stick to one strategy.

The population of man is summarily impatient. That is a fact. They just cannot wait for tomorrow to see the results of their efforts, no matter how little those efforts were, nor how short the time those efforts were exerted. You would argue that you are different, but in the end, you are also just human; impatient, like all the others.

The first way to get tons of friends on social networking sites is to have patience. As a matter of fact, this is the best strategy for all networking websites out there. It is simple and self-explanatory. You do not require a mile-long tutorial on how to be patient. However, as simple as it seems, being patient is very difficult. You just have to figure it out for yourself how to be patient, and then you can start expecting to see results from your social networking efforts.

Once you are patient enough, start connecting with people. Start with the people you are already connected with through webmail. LinkedIn has a built-in importer that will check your Windows Live Hotmail, AOL Mail, Gmail and Yahoo Mail for potential networking links. Be the smart guy or gal and use this feature to your advantage.

The last step is to use this networking sites people checker. This feature allows you to find people whom you should get in touch with. Just be yourself and be natural. You will find friends, work and lots of other things. Expand your network until you get more connections on LinkedIn who might offer you friendship or potential work in the future.
